

MARCH & FOOD DRIVE

FOR BALTIMORE HOTEL WORKERS

Working without a contract since April 2006, the Sheraton Baltimore City Center Hotel workers have called for a boycott of their own hotel. Their employer, Columbia Sussex, has increased employees' workloads, increased the cost of health benefits, eliminated key employee rights and is insisting on having the right to contract out workers' jobs.

The Hospitality Industry is the second largest industry in Baltimore. Hotel workers need to make living wages and be able to support themselves and their families. The Sheraton Baltimore City Center workers are part of the international Hotel Workers Rising Campaign to bring equality to the men and women who cook, clean and serve in hotels throughout North America.
